Program: The Gas Well Hollow Chert Complex in Meade County, Kentucky

By Rick Brown, Program Director for WAVE-3 TV and Amateur Archaeologist

Mr. Brown's observations of the ancient lithic activities associated with the nodular Wyandotte chert occurrence in the French Creek watershed in Meade County, Kentucky, prompted him to seek information about stone tool manufacture and usage in the area. His lecture summarizes his observations and conclusions to-date, which are supported by anecdotal and published academic material and Internet research.

Ancient Kentucke Historical Association

On the last Saturday of each month, the Interpretive Center features a program with an introduction from a member of the Ancient Kentucke Historical Association, shown at 2 p.m. in the auditorium on the big screen.

July 29 “The Holy Stones of Newark” with Jim Michael, explores the story of the discovery of the stones and the one hundred and forty years of speculation as to who made the religious markings on the tablets. Are the markings Hebrew and are the Ten Commandments really recorded in Newark? This is an excellent background to “The Decalogue Stone – Fact or Forgery” which will be shown at the Falls in August.
